

Gerry's

emails from America (and other exotic locations)

by Amy Fagen

Available now to download from all rodent friendly online retailers

In a world where animals and humans co-exist as equals, including the right to eat waffles and host appalling late night chat shows, there stands one above all others.

He's short, fat and hairy and has an ego the size of the North Atlantic Drift; not to mention the morals of a drunken, one eyed thieving Jackdaw. That's Gerry! After humble beginnings in a drab northern town, working as a ball selector on the national lottery, our English, "hero," strode out across the pond to find fame and cheeseburgers and his own late night chat show in the land of the large and home of the plenty.

Gerry and his gang go off on adventures, the details of which he puts down in a series of e-mails to friends and relatives back home in England. So far he's impersonated a well-known German pianist, travelled to Scotland to track down the infamous Loch Ness Monster and spent a very uncomfortable night at the Bates' Motel after being kept awake all night by inconsiderate screaming from the girl next door!

Available from:

- Amazon
- Diesel
- Kobo
- Apple